Dear Marie,

Your little note came this morning. I don't blame you a bit for feeling that I ought to write oftener, for I guess I haven't written much to anyone lately. Please don't think that I haven't thought of you much lately. And Marie, whatever you think don't get the idea in your head that I might think myself too good for you or that I ever tire of your letters.

My life before I came here seems more and more like a dream every day.
