f_1, f_2 and g_4 crisscross pass to front line of def. Then C_3 breaks out and gets a pass at R. C_3 hardly ever turns toward basket but passes to some man outside the defense. (say g_5). While C_3 is coming out f_1 or and f_2 may be breaking in. (usually down sides.) as far as I could see they have no set block plays - but depend on driving thru any little opening you leave in your front line of def.

Defense

Cal. considers their good following of shots as their chief defensive weapon - against a fast break. If you can get the ball off the bank (and I think Cal is having trouble finding a good rear guard.) you can go a long ways. We beat them back many times in our games last year.

Set Def

Cal has used a combination of a man to man and shifting zone def. I may best explain what they used against us by the diagram on the next page. Corbin (c) would come way out in the court to play around against X_4 and X_5.

X_4 or X_5 would finally get away from
