The mishap of her death

The 6th of February it being certified to the Queene of Scotts by the right honble the Earle of Kent, the Earle of Cumberland and also by Sr Amias Paulett and Sr Drue Drury her Governors, that shee was to prepare her selfe to dye the 7th of February next ensuing, wherat shee seemed not to bee in any other terror, for aught that appeared by her

Her gesture

outward gestures or behaviour (otherwise then narraylinge at shee seldome a warminge) but rather with singlinge Cheere and pleasant Countenance disposed and accepted the said admonition of Pararaw, altheoughe it was contrarie to her expectaron to ease shee short warminge of her ~~[illegible]~~ execution, but being with her selfe sudainlie resolved, as it should seeme answered, That her death should be welcome unto her, especiallie seeinge it was her Maties will. And for my part I thinke (said shee) that that should weare too farre unworthie the fruition of the ioyes of Heaven for ever, whose body would not in this world bee content to endure the stroke of a Peeantron for a moment, and then with that word spoken shee began to weepe bitterlie and became silent.

L: of Scotts

The 8th

Her attire

The 8th day of February being come, the time and place appointed for the execution as aforesaid was in readinesse. Conformingé her attire shee had on her head a borrowed haire, a dressinge of lawne edged with bonlace, a pomander Chayne with an Agnus dei about her neck, a Crucifix in her hand, a paire of Beades at her girdle with a golden Crosse at the end thereof, a vayle of lawne fastened to her Caule bended out with wyer and edged about with bonlace, her gowne was of black satten pryntid, with a trayne behinde her and longe sleeves to the ground fett with eareno buttons of Jeate, trymmed with pearle, and short sleeves of black satten tynt, with a paire of purple velvet sleeves weild underneate them, her kirtle weild of figured black satten, her petticote bulared in the bottle of Crimson satten, her petticote skirt of Crimson velvet, her shoes of Spanish leather the range side outwards, a paire of greene silke garters, her stockings wooled, watchet colour Cloth with silver and edged on the topp with silver