Preacher to conferre with all Bishop Bishop Andrewes, but indeed hee meant not to have him, Mr. Galloway, a worthie man and learned who saw doe more at the King (as hee said) than ten others that hee sending his servant Dowrall might informe the King thereof; Here hee played with the Preachers if Raleigh could persuade the Lords that hee had no intent to trouble, then hee should bee cold. Here is forgiven in the Tower, Cobham must write to Sr. Tho: Daham a worthie man that hee meant not to get into Spaine which Sr Raleigh devised in Cobhams name.

Raw: I will wash my hands of this indictment and dye a true Subt to the King.

Attor: You are the absolutest Traytor that ever lived.

Raw: Your Phrases will not prove it mr. Attorney.

Attor: Cobham doth write a lre to my Lord Cecill and doth willl Myles his man to lay it in a Spanish Bible and to make as though hee found it by chance. This was after hee had intelligence with this Divide that hee were false.

You meane

You meane a lre intended to mr Juan

Lo: Cecill. had it.

Not my lord you had it not, my ancient of the Jury respect not the wickedness nor hatred of the man, but respect the cause if hee be guilty I know you will have care of it, for the preservation of the King, and the continuance of the Royall Authorities, and the good of us all.

Attor:

I dee not heare that you have spoken one word against mee, here is no treason of mine if the Lord Cobham bee a Traytor what is that to mee?

Raw:

All that hee did was by thy instigation thou traiterous Viper.

Attor:

It becometh not a man of qualities or birthe to call mee so, but I take comfort in this it is all you can doe.

Raw:

I have angered you.

Attor:

I am not in feare to bee angrie.

Raw:

Sr Walter Raleigh mr. Attorney out of the zeale of his duty to the service of his Justice King and you for your life, bee valiant of both sides.

Lo: chiefe

Here they proceeded to the reading of the proofes, and first Cobhams Examinations and was read.

Hee confesseth &c.
