he stayed, he broke forth into these speeches.
O villaine, O traytor, I will now tell you all the truth, and thou confessed how his counsel was to goe into Flaunders and into Spaine for the obtaining of ye aforesaid money, that Rawleigh had appointed to meete him at Torsby as he returned home and to be advised by him about the distributing of the money/.

Ex: Chiefe Justice. When Cobham refused to the future examinations, he made struple to subscribe I showing cause he said that if he might have me to affirme that a peece of his deyree ought to sett to his hand, he would. I spoke then at Greenwich Richmond for feare of the Plague was sent for and told him that he ought to subscribe otherwise it were contempt of high nature, wherebyon he subscribed/the lords questioned with him further, and he showed to them (as I thought) a lee written to me but indeed it was to my Lord Cecill, he desired to see it againe, and then said O varlet, O traytor, whereupon I pressed you had not performed the trust he had reposed in you/.

Raw: Hee is so passionate a man as hath for he hath not spared his best friends that he

that he hath in England in his possession. my Lord (I take it) he that hath been examined, hath on bound upon ye peine of his examination whether it hath been according to his meaning and hereupon subscribed, methinks when my Lord Cobham answeth me now he should give some reason for it, if I had been the Plaintiff would not I have given Cobham some argument whereby to persuade the King of Spaine and to answer his obiections, I knew Westmerland and Beathwell men of other undertaking then Cobham, readie to betty their bread here/.

Did Sr Walter Rawleigh write a lee to my Lord Cobham (before he was apprehended) concerning him or not/. Sr Tho: Fowler of ye Jury.

Yes/ I am in great dispute with my selfe to speake in the behalf of this great of former acquaintance betweene him and me I pray with so farre a shott of my honour of his vertues, now broken by the distaste of his imperfections, I protest if I did here a thing that I knew would bee displeased with me for speaking in his behalf
