tenget him unworthie to bear armes.

2 The second obligne it, that to deform the revenge so longe against an inveterate malice, and an ill disposition; for the deformitie of my revenge, I answere, that at the retreatinge the first I was sodainlie astonished, that I tenget I had bine slaine, and by the opinion of many Christians from Oxford and other places, my life was then in imminte hazard for many daies after. yet after some monethe, recouteringe of my strengthe, and some taste in mynde eye, I went immediatlie over into France, and there continued two yeares expoinge of the reproufe of mynde eye. Againe, at the Kinge of Denmarkes comingе hither, I came out of France, and then hearinge at Greenwiche that Cunnor playde there before the Kinge, I must confesse that after theise priefe done, I sought for him up and downe, and yet I had mett him in any place of the Court the Court, I was then resolved to have run him through, tenge I must confesse the place had made my offence farr greater, but missinge him there that day, the next daie I went after him to London, and then sought after him for two daies, but could not meete wth him. The first newes then I heard of him, was that he was gon into the Countrie unto the Lord Rorrie. Soe for that tyme I was prevented of my purpose. Before his returne I went into Scotland, and after my returne again, I laid about for him, ever intendinge all theis weilde to have acted it my selfe. But somtime the difficulties of it, lotte, for that I was well knowne about the Playes, and yet did not my selfe know Cunnor, but carried others wth me for my direction, and afterwards agreede wth two of my Countrymen, who undertooke the acting of theis tragedie, but notwithstandinge ensued upon it, and therefore
