Of those other faults whereof this Court hath iurisdiction

Now have I run over the first pt of my purpose and have not onlie dealt wth the statute that gave the first ordinarie ... cession and authoritie to this Court, but have also discovered the small offence that are contayned therein, the wch I have not see largelie discussed as the argumt it selfe woulde beare, especiallie for that yt wth distribute the paines yttlie + beanse I meant onlie to make a summarie showe of the whole matter and yttlie for that the Judges of this Court are not tyed as I said before to the strict paines of these lawes, but as the cause shall offer to their honoble discretions may alter or increase any of the same.

It remaineth that I give some taste of those other faults also for wch this noble and grave Court doth vsualie deliver goale and correction wherein I am compelled to bee the Porter bringe that I have written lane whereby to laie them open nor have I made a roade to the memoriall of this Court it selfe wch vs the onlie Iuriso of those thinges that fall out in experience wthin the same Besides the wch they bee variable and infinite in their nature yt rather sorte according to the variable and bottomlesse drangets and devises of wicked men out of whose shoppes they bee sent wth consideration constrained the learned Poet to singe

Omnia pœnarum percurrere nomina possim.

Howbeit they maie bee all contayned in some of those yonall bonds that doe ensue. For as all causes of this Court bee in their nature criminall, and not civell, so also those criminalls doe proceed as I have before noted in those fowe wherein those statute doe treate sigt either from fraude or force or from them bote together. And likewise they all bee committed either by publique rebell or by private men antipathyes aga the one and some other times aga the other.
