matter but shall pay for it, they will yelde 100000 £ and

Differently that we may set for his Religion he is indifferent Catholiques must pay for their Conscience too wherte 200000 £ and

Lightently (that his Matie servante shall not forget to be honest) it must be in praeme of death to all that rejoyce the kinge

The totall of these summes so rash will amount to a small matter, some 2 millions and 200000 £ and

And that the kinge may be dealinge the wyliest it is not unfit that he gave some money in hand by sellinge honors as onis will goe to the rost, they will yelde 500000 Besides a devise to make xiij men nobiles titulati, they will raise eight

The Atturney did believe that their Lordships would rather conceive these to be a madd mans frenzie, then a statists politie, And it was some abatem^t^ to a strangers assertion upon our Nation, that the Spiritto was an English man, yet stralienated, bringe verie well knowne to be the Author; for he confest that the defendants were not trayed to be the Authors but maintainers thereof, in the coppyinge and communicatinge their fault, yet aggravated from their wantinge of their husbands, sight of wit and indgem^t^ because the multitude is easilie led by the opinion of those, of whom they have a good opinion. Right from the unseasonable=ness of the tyme, wherein it shined often bee stratteth. And he did appeale to all their hoppes, whether or not, they did not then tomorlie heare a rumminge noise of rumors, the unquiet dangers of distontent, The defendants esteme it for an old proiect, not begot, nor borne in these tymes, but upon the old one revived, and raised from the silent grave, growes fresh by propagation, is not this dangerous? may not this old one beget newe consequences of perill? newe divelles? for so they may be called, upon one of the defendants themselves in the front of his Answere calls them dam devellise

The Attorney, beinge silent the defendante Comrell was called for upon a demurr.

The Lord Keeper breakes the matter thus. That in Michaelmas lasta gentleman of good qualitie and well affectioned to the Stat came to him, to know whether his Matie and the Comrell had an intent to alter the govern^t^ and make an innovation. A strange question, but the issue thereof is observable. Why in two dayes after comes forte a rumor of this glorious pageant,
