

In the case of Mohawk lake found the deposits to average 1/4 inches in width. These marks could be easily recorded when found on the lee side of a boulder or more properly on the side not subjected to the immediate contact with wave or surface water agitation. Unfortunately I did not indicate the top of recording in the case of the Granddaddy Lake profile so it is possible that this representation is reversed. Until it can be verified should not be used for data.