

Even before leaving the bay observed 3 monstrous fish like forms, rolling over in the water and not more than 50' from the boat, with large dorsal fin cutting the water surface. The water was crystal clear and deep green with the floor of the sandy bay making an ideal setting to watch these creature. Instead of wading the boat as any normal marine creature would do, they chose to join the party and give us company. One swam directly in front of the boat (naturally I was sitting a far forward on the boat as I could possibly be without sitting in the water itself so had a ring side seat to view the spectacle) and then under the bow. These fishlike forms, some 8-12 feet long and husky as a cow turned out to be porpoise - a new mammal for my list. We were soon beyond the limits of the bay and after crossing the choppy surf we in the open territory of the ocean proper and a new experience for me - one thrill after another. I was becoming impressed by new sites that I had never
