

willows the wolf left area by least conspicuous route along edge of river. noted another set of wolf tracks of same size in sand and trending in same direction. This second set of tracks came from the same willow patch. These two wolves may have been a pair with den in sandunes. One river sandune had 5 or 6 large holes which could have been used by wolf or fox. One of the wolf tracks in sand (front foot) measured as follows:

total length including claw - 5 1/4 inches

associated with the wolf tracks on bare sands were several sets of the tracks of the whistling swan, Cygnus columbianus. The following track was traced in natural size from the sand, about 50' from camp.
