

in pajamas. The manner in which the tent is guide. Can be seen from the picture. I am pictured standing outside of tent with wool shorts and all. My recommendation for shorts in winter is negative. That is when one experiences real camping and hiking ways. If, however, one can foretell adverse weather conditions and when one has a favorable day with normal hiking ahead; it's ok. This tent picture was taken just in front of John's Cabin, in Rock Canyon. Next day we made a few side trips where tracking and skiing were enjoyed. On our excursions found several white snowshoe rabbits. Coyote, ^{porcupine} and squirrel tracks were the most frequently encountered forms. Recorded several pictures of the areas. The picture (2-1-3-36) was taken from edge of 3rd flat looking west down Rock Canyon with eagle cliffs on the left hand side and Squaw Peak on the right hand side. Lake Mountain & Mlak lake in distance. The flats supported snow deeper than ski poles. Picture (3-1-3-36) was taken on largest flat looking east up into the Cross Cirque Canyon. John Gessford and Ray Snow are pointing to plaque tree on mountainside. Picture (4-1-3-36) is same situation

4-1-3-36
(see p. 2.2)

5-1-3-36

6-1-3-36

as above. This flat offers an excellent opening to photograph this broad view to the east. The weather permitted only a few minutes of pictures taking possibilities. This picture shows the clouds hovering over ridge. The guard cliffs on left. Maples in middle distance. Small mice tracks were observed on this flat. Picture (5-1-3-36) taken late in afternoon on

7-1-3-36