

Jumbo Cove, W White Point, St. John Island, Virgin Islands

Aug. 22, 1957

Inspected this cave and sifted dirt but without material success. The measurements of this cave are:

Entire zone of disintegrated rocks from cliff above and laminations of sands and reddish soils

This cave would give best protection to aboriginals of any cave examined although limited in area.

Went to St. Thomas to make return air reservations. Pearly-eyed thrashers in usual numbers except in Adreon Estate where they were gone from those places most frequently seen. As trees mature fruit these birds are attracted temporarily. Some of the different kinds of fruit ^{and other food} eaten by pearly-eyed thrashers (according to Austin Delmida, a native) are: soursop, wild fig, papaya, mango, scatter apple or wild onion, manē, tomatoes, banana, pineapple, guava, cucumber, watermelon, lizard.
