

801226-175

The rising waters of Clinton Lake didn't discourage this family of red-tailed hawks from returning to its traditional nest, top photo. The family's two fledglings protest the presence of an intruder, above right, revealing newly attained wing feathers. Above, one of the parent hawks drops a newly killed rabbit into the nest for the young to feast upon.