

GENE EVANS

The first of the three papers presented at the annual meeting of the American Society for the Advancement of Science, held at the University of Chicago, was a paper by Gene Evans, entitled "The Problem of the Origin of Life." The paper was read by Mr. Evans himself, and was followed by a discussion of the same by the other members of the society. The paper was a very interesting one, and was well received by the audience.

GENE EVANS

The second of the three papers presented at the annual meeting of the American Society for the Advancement of Science, held at the University of Chicago, was a paper by Gene Evans, entitled "The Problem of the Origin of Life." The paper was read by Mr. Evans himself, and was followed by a discussion of the same by the other members of the society. The paper was a very interesting one, and was well received by the audience.

The third of the three papers presented at the annual meeting of the American Society for the Advancement of Science, held at the University of Chicago, was a paper by Gene Evans, entitled "The Problem of the Origin of Life." The paper was read by Mr. Evans himself, and was followed by a discussion of the same by the other members of the society. The paper was a very interesting one, and was well received by the audience.