

LEIPZA OGHILLATA, GERM.

Ocellated Lizard.

Agave, Mexico, 1840. In the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. (The original is in the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia.)

This beautiful bird is among the most interesting of the species which the ornithologist will find in the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

The Ocellated Lizard is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

The following account of the bird is taken from the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

The following account of the bird is taken from the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

The following account of the bird is taken from the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

The following account of the bird is taken from the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

The following account of the bird is taken from the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

The following account of the bird is taken from the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

The following account of the bird is taken from the collection of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia. It is a species of the family (the Agavidae) the species of which is the most interesting of the family.

