

ODONTOPHORUS GULANENSIS.

Gulan, Persia.

By Thomas Clouston.

ODONTOPHORUS, a genus of fishes, characterized by its compressed, somewhat deep body, and its large, prominent eyes.

The body is deep, and somewhat compressed, the head is broad and flat, the eyes are large and prominent, the mouth is small and the jaws are weak. The scales are small and the fins are short. The color is brownish above and lighter below. The fish is found in the Persian Gulf, and is common in the vicinity of Gulan.

The following are the principal characters of the genus:

Body deep, somewhat compressed. Head broad and flat. Eyes large and prominent. Mouth small. Jaws weak. Scales small. Fins short. Color brownish above and lighter below. Found in the Persian Gulf, and common in the vicinity of Gulan.

The following are the principal characters of the species:

Body deep, somewhat compressed. Head broad and flat. Eyes large and prominent. Mouth small. Jaws weak. Scales small. Fins short. Color brownish above and lighter below. Found in the Persian Gulf, and common in the vicinity of Gulan.