

CALLIPEPLA CALIFORNICA.

Callipepla Californica.

Callipepla Californica.

Callipepla Californica, a new species of the genus Callipepla, from the State of California, and the first of the genus to be introduced into the United States.

Callipepla Californica, a new species of the genus Callipepla, from the State of California, and the first of the genus to be introduced into the United States. It is a small, slender, and elegant bird, with a long, thin bill, and a long, thin tail. The plumage is a rich, warm brown, with a lighter, buff-colored throat and breast. The wings are a darker brown, and the tail is a deep, rich brown. The bird is very graceful and elegant in its movements, and it is a very common bird in the State of California.

Callipepla Californica, a new species of the genus Callipepla, from the State of California, and the first of the genus to be introduced into the United States. It is a small, slender, and elegant bird, with a long, thin bill, and a long, thin tail. The plumage is a rich, warm brown, with a lighter, buff-colored throat and breast. The wings are a darker brown, and the tail is a deep, rich brown. The bird is very graceful and elegant in its movements, and it is a very common bird in the State of California.

Callipepla Californica, a new species of the genus Callipepla, from the State of California, and the first of the genus to be introduced into the United States. It is a small, slender, and elegant bird, with a long, thin bill, and a long, thin tail. The plumage is a rich, warm brown, with a lighter, buff-colored throat and breast. The wings are a darker brown, and the tail is a deep, rich brown. The bird is very graceful and elegant in its movements, and it is a very common bird in the State of California.

Callipepla Californica, a new species of the genus Callipepla, from the State of California, and the first of the genus to be introduced into the United States. It is a small, slender, and elegant bird, with a long, thin bill, and a long, thin tail. The plumage is a rich, warm brown, with a lighter, buff-colored throat and breast. The wings are a darker brown, and the tail is a deep, rich brown. The bird is very graceful and elegant in its movements, and it is a very common bird in the State of California.