

YUTINA DICTIONARY

William H. Henshaw

Yutina, Alaska, 1901-1902. Published by the Alaska Historical Society, 1903.

The Yutina dialect is one of the most important of the Eskimo languages, and is the only one which has been written down. It is spoken by the Yutina people, who live in the Yutina River valley, in the north-eastern part of Alaska. The Yutina people are a branch of the Eskimo race, and their language is a branch of the Eskimo language. The Yutina dialect is one of the most important of the Eskimo languages, and is the only one which has been written down. It is spoken by the Yutina people, who live in the Yutina River valley, in the north-eastern part of Alaska. The Yutina people are a branch of the Eskimo race, and their language is a branch of the Eskimo language.

The Yutina dialect is one of the most important of the Eskimo languages, and is the only one which has been written down. It is spoken by the Yutina people, who live in the Yutina River valley, in the north-eastern part of Alaska. The Yutina people are a branch of the Eskimo race, and their language is a branch of the Eskimo language. The Yutina dialect is one of the most important of the Eskimo languages, and is the only one which has been written down. It is spoken by the Yutina people, who live in the Yutina River valley, in the north-eastern part of Alaska. The Yutina people are a branch of the Eskimo race, and their language is a branch of the Eskimo language.

The Yutina dialect is one of the most important of the Eskimo languages, and is the only one which has been written down. It is spoken by the Yutina people, who live in the Yutina River valley, in the north-eastern part of Alaska. The Yutina people are a branch of the Eskimo race, and their language is a branch of the Eskimo language. The Yutina dialect is one of the most important of the Eskimo languages, and is the only one which has been written down. It is spoken by the Yutina people, who live in the Yutina River valley, in the north-eastern part of Alaska. The Yutina people are a branch of the Eskimo race, and their language is a branch of the Eskimo language.