

PHILOSOPHY: HUMANISM

1. Humanism

Humanism is a philosophical movement that emphasizes the value and agency of human beings, individually and collectively, and especially the ethical precepts of justice, tolerance, and compassion.

Humanism is a secular, rational, and scientific approach to life.

Humanism is a philosophy that emphasizes the value and agency of human beings, individually and collectively, and especially the ethical precepts of justice, tolerance, and compassion. It is a secular, rational, and scientific approach to life. Humanism is a philosophy that emphasizes the value and agency of human beings, individually and collectively, and especially the ethical precepts of justice, tolerance, and compassion. It is a secular, rational, and scientific approach to life.

Humanism is a philosophy that emphasizes the value and agency of human beings, individually and collectively, and especially the ethical precepts of justice, tolerance, and compassion. It is a secular, rational, and scientific approach to life.

Humanism is a philosophy that emphasizes the value and agency of human beings, individually and collectively, and especially the ethical precepts of justice, tolerance, and compassion. It is a secular, rational, and scientific approach to life.