

CALOTHORAX CALLIOTE, GAMMA

Mexican Saltillo

Calothorax Calliote, Gamma, is a new species of Calothorax, found in the State of Coahuila, Mexico. It is characterized by its large, rounded, and somewhat flattened shape, and its yellowish-brown color. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common.

The Calothorax Calliote, Gamma, is a new species of Calothorax, found in the State of Coahuila, Mexico. It is characterized by its large, rounded, and somewhat flattened shape, and its yellowish-brown color. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common.

The Calothorax Calliote, Gamma, is a new species of Calothorax, found in the State of Coahuila, Mexico. It is characterized by its large, rounded, and somewhat flattened shape, and its yellowish-brown color. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common. It is found in the same localities as the other species of Calothorax, and is very common.