

PROVISIONS.—There has been no deficiency of these; for in Lawrence, as elsewhere, the demand produced a supply, by prompting those residing on the borders of the Territory to bring of their abundance to the Settlement; and the competition was sufficient to keep prices reasonable. This undoubtedly will hold true at other settlements.

After the first year or two, the settlements will not only supply themselves, but have a surplus to dispose of.

A market for all such surplus may, for years to come, be found near at hand, inasmuch as thousands are passing through that region every year, along the California, Santa Fe, and Great Salt Lake City routes, all of whom require more or less supplies; besides, the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, and soon a line of railroads, will afford facilities for reaching other markets.

PRICES CURRENT.—As inquiries are constantly being made respecting the cost of various articles, the following Prices Current are presented, showing the state of the market at the Company's first settlements, at Lawrence and Topeka. The prices, with slight variations, will probably answer for the other settlements.
