

the formation of a free State by their votes, but aim by direct action, to ferment rebellion and discontent among the slaves of Missouri.

By a courteous demeanor in his intercourse with the slaveholder, and proper reserve on the subject of slavery, the emigrant, without a sacrifice of principle, will not only secure for himself, kind treatment, but will also aid in removing the unjust prejudice now existing in the minds of slaveholders, against Kansas emigrants from free States.

When arrived at Kansas City, the emigrant has only to cross the Missouri river, to reach the Territory of Kansas. He will there hire or purchase a horse, mule, or Indian Pony, (it is to be presumed he has provided himself with a rifle, and saddle-bags,) and start for the exploration of the "promised land;" select his location, mark out and record his boundaries, erect his log-house, and commence in earnest a farmer's or mechanic's life.

The cost of erecting a log-house is very light, (from $20 to $50,) and in the settled portions of the Territory, the newly arrived emigrant may expect to receive aid from the inhabitants, in the erection of their houses free of charge. No fears need be entertained from hostile Indians, while exploring Eastern, or Central Kansas, as the tribes inhabiting those portions of the Territory are peaceable. Generally, the emigrant can obtain from the settlers, all necessary information regarding the country, routes, &c., &c. The emigrant must bear in mind, that Kansas is a new and wild country; and the early settlers should be prepared to endure some privations.

Let no one who is dependant on his daily labor for a support start with the mistaken idea that wealth is to be acquired without labor, or who from previous habits is unable to overcome the privations common to every new country.

Those who embark in this enterprise must be willing to toil patiently for a few years, content for a season, with the bare necessities of life, looking for their reward in the possession of a farm of the most fertile soil, the certain rise of the price of the abundance of wild game, the mechanic, in the territory mentioned, he has offered his services with wages ample for his family. Surveyors also are in demand.

That Kansas is now a free State, is now a fact. This territory was first settled by a man of the Foresight, who, having arrived hastily through Utah, or to the Indian Territory.

Now, Kansas is a free State; and the new settlers, in the Northern Hemisphere, are now writing the history of our country.

It is safe to say that the stores, mills and other buildings exported from Kansas, the Road completed to St. Louis; and all the other things of life, will be found at reasonable rates.

In respect to land, the conditions necessary for its cultivation, or its abundance,—its location, the Atlantic and Pacific Rail Road, (now completed from St. Louis to Kansas,) from St. Louis, connected by an iron road, the advantages of which will be fully marked, there is no stock to emigrate.
