Green River—is the county seat of Sweetwater county, 845 miles west of Omaha, the end of the Laramie and the commencement of the Western Division of the U. P.

The place is a regular eating station, where passenger trains stop 30 minutes—those from the East for breakfast, those from the West for supper. Much taste is displayed at this station in decorating the dining room and office with mountain curiosities, mineral specimens, moss agate and horns of game.

The city has a good court-house—costing $35,000; several dry goods, grocery, clothing and other stores; two hotels, and about 400 population; also, a daily newspaper, the Evening Press. The Railroad Company has a round-house of 15 stalls, and machine shops and repair shops, located here, that, in the early years of the road, were at Bryan.

It is claimed that the surrounding country is rich in mines, but one thing is certain—it is rich in cattle; it has cattle on more than a “thousand hills.”

The bluffs near this station present a peculiar formation called, by Prof. Hayden, the “Green River Shales.” For a beautiful illustration of the bluffs, the station and the bridge, see ANNEX No. 16.

The walls of these bluffs rise perpendicularly for hundreds of feet, are of a grayish buff color, and are composed of layers, apparently sedimentary deposits of all thicknesses, from that of a knife-blade to two feet. At the base of the bluff the layers are thin and composed of arenaceous clay, with laminated sandstone, mud markings and other indications of shallow water or mud flats; color for 100 feet, ashen brown; next above are lighter colored layers, alternate with greenish layers, and fine
