sport is designed for all people, regardless of age, color, creed or social standing. In an effort to provide bigger and better fishing annually for the vast angling population, the Fish and Game department works untiringly toward this goal. Hence the decision to have a closed season on bass was based on scientific facts and sound fish management practices.

Kansas is not alone in having a closed bass season. Thirty-one of the 48 states, on which records are available, have a closed bass season, and in most instances, a much longer closed season than has Kansas. Missouri keeps the season closed on bass from December 1 to May 29; Arkansas has a closed season from March 15 to May 15, in switched off and on at night or all public waters except big Nor- horn blowing anytime will often folk lake which is open the year frighten into action wild creaaround. Investigations by other states. as well as the experience of Kansas anglers, has demonstrated the fallacy of depending solely on the stocking of pond fishes as the solution of fishing woes. In Kansas waters, the bass is the most cannbalistic of all species. They don't care whether they eat other fish or their own young! If sufficiently abundant bass can be encouraged to prevent other less desirable panfish from taking over our fishing waters, our fishing will be better off. It is to give the bass more of a chance to spawn that Kansas has a closed season on bass.

It is true that climatic conditions vary in Kansas, but like the birds and bees and all forms of life, bass do reproduce and have a spawning season. Tests by the Commission's fisheries biologists show that, nomally, most bass will spawn during the closed season in Kansas. It is as short a closed
