

Mini-Bronc

WHITE HUNTER

By the 1880's the slaughter of the buffalo by white hide hunters, who left the carcasses to the wolves and scavengers, literally starved out the indians of the plains. One of the marks of a professional buffalo hunter was his ability to drop as many animals as close together as possible in order to save his skinnners the necessity of wandering at random over the prairies to retrieve the hides. A good hunter dropped only as many animals as his skinnners could handle in the course of a day.