

The women of Nicodemus were visionaries, they were dreamers, they could see the possibilities that the awesome Western Frontier held. They were adventurous, and held within themselves the spark that motivated them far beyond their own fears. They possessed the courage to set out on a journey that would change their lives, a journey that led them into what later became known as the 'Wild West.'

They were persevering and had true strength to carry on in spite of the hardships that confronted them in their daily lives as pioneers.

They were industrious and practical taking little and making ~~more~~ ^{much}, turning what little the desolate prairie offered into big meals for their families, warmth for their dug outs and even soap for their baths.

They were entrepreneurs, using skills that were taught to them by their ^{grandmothers} mothers, aunts, sisters & other women to create businesses for their selves & their families.
