Dear Brothers of the Ever-Victorious Clan:

It seems as if information is leaking out in these parts to the effect that Kansas has in captivity a pretty likely group of young freshman academicians who can toss the casaba around with much skill and dexterity.

Somehow the impression is also current that Kansas once had a group of indoor Galahads who crushed all of the conference opposition before them on a certain year.

Some bright wit thought it might be a good idea to assemble the cohorts of the yearlings and the old men whose waist line is extended somewhat (you notice I didn't mention bulging chests), and match these two outfits before one of our games.

The purpose in writing you fellows is to find a convenient date that it might be possible for you to come. A conference game would be swell, but we would have to play your game after our conference game on account of Old Man Pralle, who is captain by prior right of this year's varsity. He is the only old man we have who still grows whishers.

schedule, which is just what it means.
