Big Red Five Faces Brown

sing a nice one-hander from the outside, the Cornell rebounder has received little chance to use it, as he is needed under the boards.

Meade, who played outstandingly against Buffalo and Colgate, could not find the basket in the Harvard game. Whether he can score consistently from the outside may have a large bearing on the success of this year's Cornell team.

The two sophomores in the starting lineup, Pearson and Roberson, both lack vital game experience. However, they have proved increasingly valuable in every game. Pearson, seeing spot action in the Colgate encounter, scored 10 points, and was an important factor in that game.

Roberson, although only 6-1, is able to outjump opponents four to five inches taller. He has proven to be an invaluable aid to Zelek in clearing the rebounds. As yet, Roberson has been unable to score with any consistency, but may find his shooting eye tonight.

Based on last week's game, it would appear that senior Don Hughes should see early action. Used mainly in spot roles last season, Hughes may turn out to be the "clutch" performer which the Cornellians are going to need as the season progresses.
