MANHATTAN—Towering Jack Parr hit 26 points and got plenty of help from Kansas State's long-range shooters here Thursday night as the Wildcats flogged Loyola of Los Angeles, 92-66.

Parr, K-State's 6-9 sophomore hope from Richmond, Va., hit hooks, tip-ins and layups, and leaped high to guide in some shots from far out as he posted his personal single-game high.

Squaring their season's record at 2-2, the Wildcats treated a crowd of about 7,200 to a hot first half in which they hit 44 per cent of their shots in posting a 43-29 lead.

Parr got six baskets in the first half, and Fritz Schneider and Stone wound up with 12 points.

Parr, towering above the opposition that could offer no player taller than 6-4, also collected 20 rebounds in the approximately 35 minutes he played. The total is just three short of the K-State record owned by Dick Knostman.

K-State ruled both backboards, and Loyola's hopes died right there. By the middle of the second half, the Wildcats lead had mounted to 20 points, and from there on it was just a question of how bad Cat coach Tex Winter wanted to make it.

The K-State height advantage paid off with 74 rebounds to Loyola's 43.

State, enjoying the romp against the over-matched Lions, was even hotter in the second half than the first. The Wildcats, after hitting 19 of 43 shots in the first half, connected on 18 of 39 in the second half for 46 per cent, and 45.1 per cent for the game.

Loyola put up only four fewer shots than K-State, but got only 26 of the 78 for 33 per cent.

The victory broke a two-game State losing streak taken on the
