Dear Dr. F. C. Allen,

A few days ago your ^{novel} letter arrived, and I am still enjoying its resourceful text. Throughout the entire letter it was the unique Allen personality, which never tires one, that insured your reader of much reading pleasure.

I hope you are well and keeping abreast of the tremendous task the government found you highly qualified to match. What with new cadets and boots rolling in each new day. I can imagine the extra burden of correspondence. From what I have as tangible evidence I would say you are doing a wonderful job of everything.

One year had slyly passed on since word from you came; however don't think all this while I was
