

This new book, "Better Basketball", explains every detail of the very questions that you ask. I am strong on rebound shots. Before I have anyone shoot at the basket I have three men cover rebounds - one at the side, one in front, and the other offensive man at the other side.

I know exactly what you are asking, but it is rather difficult to explain that to anyone so he will understand it in a letter. The Basketball Bible will give you the revolving triangle and the rolling offense. We use this merely as a principal in practice. In a game we do not follow all of these gyrations in actual game conditions, but we do have the figure 8 criss-crossing with the men always pointing and pinching in so that the passes go in angles and the men go in curves.

The fundamentals in "My Basketball Bible" have not changed a bit, but there are so many new play situations that this new book will give you a wonderful bit of help. If this letter does not fully cover your questions, please write me again and I will endeavor to give you further details.

Very sincerely yours,

FCA:AH

Director of Physical Education.