

As a youth, the Wichitan attended the Olathe School for the Deaf, and his early training in for the diamond was under the famous Luther (Dummy) Taylor, one of baseball's greatest pitchers for a number of seasons with the New York Giants. Taylor visited Wichita not so long since and said at that time he considered Fuller as one of the most adept pupils he had come in contact with in his long career as an instructor at the Kansas School. Fuller not only starred on the diamond, but was also rated high as a football and basketball player.

Three more names were added to the Kansas Baseball Hall of Fame Friday night at Lawrence stadium when some 6,000 fans chose George W. Hale, Jimmy Durham and "Dummy" Fuller to be honored by the Old-Time Baseball Players Association.

The names of the trio who made baseball history on the sandlots, minor and major leagues shortly after the turn of the century, will be enscribed on the scroll along with nine other Kansans who have been honored during the past three years, E. E. Chaney, president of the Old-Time Baseball Players' Association made known last night.

Those chosen in the poll of fans Friday will receive a plaque the night of the following Friday at Lawrence Stadium as part of the Kansas championship tourney.
