

September 30, 1937.

Mr. Richard Barker,
Director of Athletics,
Cornell College,
Mount Vernon, Iowa.

Dear Dick:

Some one told me at the Lake Okoboji Coaching School of a very clever stunt that you pulled off between halves of a basketball game.

It was a fake wrestling bout where one wrestler has his head in between the other grappler's arms on a headlock, and after much pain and struggling he extricates himself from that headlock, and just at the time the populace cheer the young man quietly slips his head back in the same hole that the victor had clamped upon him heretofore.

That sounded so good to me that I would like to copy that between halves of one of our games if you will write me about the painful fakes that these two pseudo-Galahads perform.

Would you kindly do this at your early convenience as I am planning on my program now and want to put some of this stuff on with an anticipated regularity. As the magazine editor would say, "I would like to put some of this stuff to bed"; in other words get it out of the way, and have it on a future program.

I trust everything is going along swell with you, Dick.

With kindest regards and appreciation,
I am

Fraternally yours,

FCA:AH

Director of Physical Education.