

September 20, 1937.

Coach W. H. Browne,
Department of Athletics,
University of Nebraska,
Lincoln, Nebraska.

Dear Brownie:

Some time in the not too distant future why would it not be a good thing during the Christmas holidays to pull off a Big Six tournament at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln.

This could be played immediately after the Christmas holidays began, or after Christmas in the interim between Christmas and the beginning of the school year. I believe we could pack that field house of yours for every game. With sixteen in the tournament we could play double headers every night for about three nights for a wonderful drawing card.

Not only would each outfit make far more than their expenses, but it would create an interest that would be most stimulating to basketball and the conference.

The reason that I am suggesting Nebraska over Missouri and Oklahoma is on account of the fact that you have the greatest seating capacity, and you have a town in which you could draw a great crowd every night. Vacation time wouldn't hurt your set-up while at Norman and Columbia it would.

This is just a thought for you, Brownie, for the future, but I would heartily cooperate in such a venture, and I believe if you think well enough of it you could sell this idea to the coaches at the basketball interpretation meeting in December.

I trust that you and Biffer are getting ready for the Minnesota Juggernaut that is coming your way about October 2nd. We are pulling for Nebraska to