

to see Doctor Alexander Graham<sup>2</sup> Bell. Bell recommended a teacher to them. Her name Anne Mansfield Sullivan. She came to Helens home to teach her in march 1887. This is when the task of learning began.

We find in the case of Helen Keller every bit of learning has taken place through the fingers or sense of touch. She first learned words, then the articles to which to relate them too. After this she began to make sentences.
The next important step in her life was the learning how to read through her fingers. After this the next step was learning to write.

In 1888 Helen and her teacher