Dear Dr. Allen:

Last year I wrote you regarding a new book which I had heard was to be put out by you, and at the time you told me that it would not be out until the Fall of 1937. I wonder if this book is ready, and if so, where I can get one? At your convenience, will you please let me hear from you, and while I presume that it will be possible to get the book here in the East, I just want to make certain that it is ready; and if not, when it will be ready.

Considering the fact that I was on the road practically all last Winter, we had a fairly good season at the Seminary.

I was with the boys for only three games, two of which we won. One of them was a very sensational upset, a game in which we beat the leading high school team here in the State. It seemed a hopeless task, but we did it very nicely in an over-time game by a margin of 2 points. I guess it was more luck than anything since I shifted our captain, who plays a forward position - and he is one of the best forwards I ever looked at - to a guard position against the big star of this other team. The latter played forward so my captain had to shift to guard. I then shifted one of my guards, the left guard who, as you will perhaps recall, was always my key-man on the teams I coached, shifting him to a forward in order to play against a high scoring guard. I then pulled my center and shifted him to a guard, and shifted the other guard to center. The thing worked out perfectly. The forward on this other team scored a fast basket right in the beginning of the game, and from that point on was held scoreless while my own captain, playing a guard position for the first time in his life, scored seven baskets and four fouls.
