

December 27, 1944.

Managing Editor,
International News Service,
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Sir:

Quite recently one of my friends sent me a copy of the San Francisco Call Bulletin published under date of October 25, 1944, and in which was published an article written by your sports editor, Mr. Lawton Carver, in which I was referred to in many instances in ridicule and contempt. Obviously Mr. Carver has a right to his own personal opinion. However, as I have been informed by competent authorities, our law places restrictions on the degree and character of which one may indulge in a printed and published article in expressing these personal opinions for public consumption.

In my long experience in the field of athletics I have been involved in heated debates, but never before have I or my adversaries resorted to such wanton and malicious degradation of character, which was so apparent in the aforementioned Carver article.

In my own mind I had attempted to minimize the effect and the resultant damage caused by Mr. Carver's printed attack upon me, but after repeated repercussions from this article brought to my attention by friends and mere acquaintances, I became aware for the first time of the severity of the damage that had been done me.

Doubtless you may wish to take the initiative to see that due and immediate reparation is made.

Very truly yours,

Director of Physical Education,
Varsity Basketball Coach.

FCA:AN