

Then, and only then, would the fifteen-year-old American boy, the idealist, live in a happy sphere because then he would look to his hero - a real hero in fact because he would be observing the laws as they are written. And this high commissioner, through his deputy commissioners, would enforce the law in every conference and school that subscribes to this plan. The deputy commissioners would not necessarily be men of high salary any more than they are at the present, but at the present time they have no power to enforce their findings. Therefore, the high commissioner would write the laws, organize, supervise and deputize, so that all the deputy commissioners would do would be to carry out his findings according to the laws that were written.
