Mr. Barry Faris,
Editor-in-Chief,

New York City, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Faris:

Answering your letter of January 5th, I learn on very good authority that Mr. Carver's article appeared in several first edition papers other than the San Francisco Call-Bulletin.

I have never had any desire at any time to circulate your so-called side of my controversy.

I realize full well that your organization has no malice toward me personally. For a time I debated the extent of the injury. But after the Brooklyn College expose I have come to this conclusion: namely, that if you are willing to call in the red-faced Mr. Lawton Carver, your scintillating news service sports editor and have him sit on your paternal knee while he is persuaded to read to you in full his now-famous sports column as of October 25th regarding "the loud-mouthed bumpkin of no particular significance", then I will have felt fully compensated. Are you willing to do this?

Sincerely yours,
