

Brass
Tacks
by
"Cy" Sherman

Kansas U., the man whom the east delights in dressing him in print as the "Phog Horn," is chuckling up both sleeves at Mr.

Gamblers Ned Irish, that genial guy who

Grab Off conceived the Clean Sweep doubleheader basketball idea at New York's Madison Square Garden.

After Phog cut loose with his recent blast of the Garden enterprise, charging that the activities of professional gamblers endangered the integrity of the court sport, Promoter Irish gave notice that all members of the betting junta would be barred from the arena.

And then it happened—one of those coincidences that defy explanation. Mr. Irish staged his first twin bill of the Garden season. New York U., one of the four participating teams, was established along Broadway as favorites to win its game—it was "give" 13 points or "take" 15, and suit your self in choosing your bet.

Now for a "Believe It or Not." The New York U. boys bagged the victory by a 14-point margin, on which basis the gamblers swept the board on every bet.

* * * *
SUREST thing we know is that
Coach Forrest (Phog) Allen of