

The national commissioner would be paid according to the student population of the conference schools, and $100,000 salary would not be out of line. This man would have to be a man of great vision. He would administer the thing nationally, and commissioners like Reaves Peters and Artie Eilers would be perfectly fine to work under him because then they would only enforce the edict of the national czar. Only schools subscribing to this voluntary plan would be permitted to play with member schools. Therefore, the outlaws and the professionals would play with their own class. And every school in the conference would have a chance. It wouldn't be a "small pocket-book" league and a "big pocket-book" league. The "small pocket-book" leagues would have no more business playing the "big pocket-book" leagues than the antiquated artillery of Poland had in meeting Hitler's panzer division. If you get what I mean.

Sincerely yours,

Director of Physical Education,
Varsity Basketball Coach.
