

So in response to Mr. Hamilton's call I said, "Yes, indeed, we would like to play you. We consider it an honor." He said, "How much money do you want?" I said, "Just what we are worth - whatever you want to give us. We are glad to come."

Now, this is no build-up on my part. I, having attended the University of Kansas and having played on her teams, felt that it was a great honor to bring a team back to play Kansas. I had no antagonism against the University. I loved her. Would it be fair to say that the majority of small college people not only dislike, but utterly detest some angle of university behavior? Many people think that the university people are highhat. They are not. I have coached boys in the Indian school, in denominational colleges, in some state institutions, and the university, and the finest, cleanest group that I know of are in the University and on her teams.

Now, do not misunderstand me. There is a lunatic fringe of about 15% in the University, and of course the University having a greater number enrolled, is bound to have a greater number incorporated in that lunatic fringe. Children of wealthy parents come here for the social splurge, for a dip into politics, or high life which is found in every college. The University is the pinnacle of education in the state and it is simply a cross-section of the children from Dodge City, Pittsburg, Kansas City, Marion, Frontenac (where it is alleged the finest deep-shaft whiskey is made in Kansas), El Dorado, Hutchinson, Wichita, and so forth. So you see what we have here at the University is a mixture of the good, the better and the best, the nine run, the culls, and some offcasts of society of Kansas.

The game with St. Benedict's was played four years ago while I was Director of Athletics. The game with Washburn was played this year under Mr. Henry's directorship. I believe if you will be extremely fair with yourself you will not blame the University boys alone for their conduct in either one of these games. Someone has said there are three sides to every question - your side, my side and the right side. Personally, I hold the coach of every team responsible who permits any boy on either side to slug without immediately taking him from the line up, and then to remove everyone of those men who slugged, and not wait for the official to do it. People are sick of such nauseating exhibitions like slugging in any ball game. We have been led to believe that boys should hold their temper, should say "no" to their emotions even if they are burning up inside. That is the scheme of teaching education through play. No boy can play a good game while he wants to injure his opponent. It was Lord Balfour who said that "every man should be a laughing tiger", but this tiger should know when to spring and upon whom to pounce. It is not always a physical attack that has the most potency.

Now, I want to add a brief for our Kansas boys. I have been coaching here for a number of years and with only one or two exceptions have I seen a man on any team of all the sports show the
