

August 15, 1939.

Dr. H. B. Hungerford,
Michigan Biological Station,
Cheboygan, Michigan.

Dear Herb:

Thank you for your good letter of the 5th instant. I am just leaving for Atlanta to conduct a coaching clinic down in the Georgia metropolis.

You are right - we will have no need of the space any more this summer, but we did hope to use it in the early fall. Maybe I am wrong, but I had understood that you had not been using the bee house for a couple of years. In the case that you feel you must have considerably more storage space we could put a partition in there at our own expense and use a part of, say the north end, and definitely agree with you that any time you had any need for it we would move out at once.

I do not want you to feel that we are chiseling it away from you, but the bee house is in such a strategic position for the storing of archery equipment and so forth that we use every day down there that it would be a decided accommodation to us if we could use it. We would definitely guarantee that we would protect you in any loss to any of your property should anything be taken. My idea was to put a tight partition across it and have it entirely separated from your storage space.

I will appreciate it very much if you can give your consideration to this when you return. I will call you when it is convenient and I would like to drop down to the bee house with you and see what arrangement we can make.

With every good wish for your health and happiness, I am

Sincerely yours,

Director of Physical Education and Recreation,
Varsity Basketball Coach.

FCA:AH