Kansas City, Missouri.

Dear Mr. Hamilton:

Last night I received your special delivery letter and in this morning's mail I have your blank check together with the two tickets enclosed for which you wish to trade six.

I am sure that Mr. Falkenstien will be happy to take care of Barrett's ticket complimentary, as he is a K man. He perhaps will want to take care of Bell, the official. Of course, the tax must be paid on these, but otherwise they will be with the compliments of the Athletic Association. However, Mr. Falkenstien will write you at once.

You certainly are a good sport in not expecting some 50 yard line seats. Most people are unreasonable in this regard, and they expect you to pull bunnies out of the hat at the last minute. You can be sure that with your fair attitude you will get more service than the fellow who tries to put on pressure, especially when there are not any tickets to be had.

Thank you for your good wishes regarding the sell-out for the game, and I hope that you very much enjoy this game. It should be a thriller.

With every good wish, I am

Very sincerely yours,
