

Enclosed is a copy of an article written from the material I collected by Bernard Crandell, a United Press staff writer, which may prove to be of some interest to you. I would appreciate any comment you care to make about the article.

Although trying to remain unbiased so as to make an honest approach to the various coaches' opinions, I find myself disapproving of the super-speed of this year's games. Therefore, I will await your answer with considerable expectation, hoping that you or Dr. Naismith may have some more effective approach to getting this ruling stricken from the basketball rulebook.

P.S. I am making a new canvass of all those men whom I contacted last February in the hope of shedding more light on what seems to be the most difficult problem which basketball has faced in many years. It has been said that the fans like the present type of game much more and would leave the country's fieldhouses in droves should the center jump be re-introduced. What do you think about this?
