Major L. McC. Jones, Director of Athletics, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebraska.

Dear Biff:

Gwinn Henry came into the office this morning and told me that he had written you for four tickets to the Nebraska-Minnesota game. He asked me if I would accompany him on the trip.

Nothing would give me more pleasure. However, I told him of the Big Six rule in which the non-complimentary rule is incorporated. He said, "Gee, I didn't know about this and I am sorry that I pulled the boner." I also told him that there is such a thing as professional courtesy, but I thought it might embarrass you with the business office, and if you cannot furnish the tickets, Gwinn and I would like to slip in at some gate even without the privilege of a seat. Of course we would not expect to evade Uncle Sam on the government tax, but I certainly would love to see the game if it is compatible with the professional courtesy rule and not against the Big Six Conference rule concerning passes.

There are a lot of administrative details that Gwinn is not acquainted with, but at every opportunity I am passing on to him some of the benefits of the information that I received during my seventeen years' tenure.

Make it easy on yourself and don't embarrass yourself. I wanted to send this letter along so it might provide an easement in your dilemma -- that is, if you have such a thing.

Sincerely yours,
