Dear Mac:

I am very glad to send you one of our basketball charts, and trust that it will be of interest and value to you. I have called this a "batting average" chart because the boys are more familiar with this baseball terminology. We have been very successful with this chart.

John Bunn said to me that when he used his chart he couldn't tell whether the team won or lost, but this is not the case by using the chart we have developed. Every one is a determiner. I personally believe that this is a piece of research that is worth while and that commends itself to a great deal of study. I shall be glad to have your reaction after you have gone over the material carefully.

I am wondering if you have seen a copy of my new text, "Better Basketball", published by the McGraw-Hill Book Company, of New York. I have gone over John Bunn's new book, and many parts of it remind me of my earlier text, "My Basketball Bible". John drew all the diagrams for me in that book, and of course he was very familiar with the context of it.

With best wishes for your continued success, I am

Very sincerely yours,
