

Here Brewton Berry, professor of Sociology, with a Doctor's degree from Edinburgh, follows the foibles of mankind down through the ages in a subject that is older than civilization, but ever new. Devils, ghosts, witches, omens and other interesting things like that peep out in print to tell you what it means to laugh before breakfast, what happens when you drop a dish rag, and how to make a barren tree bear fruit.

From him you learn about necromancy, cleromancy, and scapulimancy, and what happened when Fabius Maximus was elected for a third term.
