

he had better jump in with both feet and make the best of it while it is still fresh in his mind and while he has the ambition, and endeavor to put everything in practice that he has learned in his theory classes in the University. It is time to quit playing just for fun unless he wants to make a business or a profession of it. The game is not worth a candle from a business or professional standpoint.

I trust that you see my point. I am glad that you have written me and I trust that I have made myself clear.

With all good wishes, I am

Very sincerely yours,
